

I am opposed to any proposal to disable HDTV analog signals as proposed in docket 08-82. I purchased two high definition display devices back in 2001 that are part of my home theatre system. One is a 50inch plasma television from Runco and the other is a 3 gun CRT based video projector from Videkron. These two display devices only have analog inputs (no HDMI) and together represent a $50,000 investment. I would be exceedingly upset if this proposal goes forward and I am locked out of HDTV signals for this system. Since my entire theatre system uses analog signaling it would cost upwards of $75,000-$100,000 to switch out all the components necessary to switch over to HDMI. I cannot afford to do that at this point in my life. I think you should seriously consider killing this proposal. What good are standards if they keep changing?
